PREFACE TO VOLUME II.

THE present is the second volume of the Old Accounts of the City of Edinburgh, and contains the Dean of Guild Accounts from Michaelmas 1552 to Michaelmas 1567, with the exception of the period from October 1558 to May 1560. As explained in the Preface to the first volume, these have been transcribed and edited by Mr Adam at the request of the Town Council.

The Dean of Guild was the Chairman or Chief Officer of the Guildry, the merchant class of the Burgesses, who till near the end of the sixteenth century had the control of the Town's affairs. The "Gilda Mercatoria," or Merchant Guild of Edinburgh, was in existence at a very early period, but the first reference to it in the existing records is in a Minute of 3rd October 1403, which gives the names of the Officers of the Guild then elected, and among others the Dean, who was also the custodier of the Church fabric (Decanus Gilde et Custoditor operis ecclesiae). In 1518 the Guildry was reorganised by a Charter from the Town Council. The "Merchants Fraternity and Gild * Brethren" were granted an

* Note.—Gild. The common spelling of the word has for a long time been "Guild," but it is now maintained by many competent authorities that the proper form is "Gild," without the "n." Etymologically, this view has much to be said for it; the ancient usage seems to support it; and in the Accounts here presented the word is invariably spelt "gild" in the text.

aisle in the Church of Sanct Geill, and held extensive mercantile jurisdiction and privileges.

In Edinburgh, as in some Continental cities, there was a long struggle between the merchants and the craftsmen or members of the incorporated trades, who were practically excluded from the administration of the Town's affairs. At length, under a Decreet Arbitral of King James VI. in 1583, the craftsmen were admitted to substantial representation in the Town Council.

The Merchant Guild of Edinburgh must not be identified with the Merchant Company of Edinburgh, established in 1681, and which is so well known at the present day, although each member of the latter requires to be a Burgess and Guild Brother of the City.

The payments in the Accounts relate mainly to the Kirk of Saint Giles, the secular affairs of which were under the special care of the Dean of Guild.

Saint Giles (Saint Egidius)—or, as he was popularly called, "Sanct Geill"—was the patron saint of the City; and the Church named after him was the first parochial one in Edinburgh. The Saint, who had been an Abbot in France, died on 1st September 721, and the anniversary of that date was held as his Festival. According to tradition, he at one period of his life owed his preservation to a hind, the figure of which appears on the City Arms to this day. The religious life of the Town's people was bound up with the City Church. The Merchants' Guild, as already mentioned, had an aisle and altar; and each of the incorporated crafts or trades had its patron saint with an altar in the Church, and contributed to the up-keep of the services. The Church, which had previously been subject to the Abbot of Dunfermline, and at an earlier period to the Bishop of Lindisfarne, was in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries a collegiate charge under the patronage and care of the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Council. The Accounts now presented show the Dean of Guild's intromissions during the period from 1552 to 1567, with the exception already mentioned.

The Reformation or change of the National Religion took place in the middle of the period embraced in the Accounts. The old faith and system of worship, with which the whole social order and civic organisation seemed to be inseparably bound up, is seen in full operation in the earlier part of the period. Then comes an upheaval and a brief time of confusion, followed in the later years of the period by the firm establishment of the new or reformed religious regime. The prosaic details of these Accounts may throw light on not a few points in the history of the time which must remain of profound interest to all Scotsmen.

The Accounts in the volume begin with the intromissions of James Carmichael, Dean of Guild from 4th October 1552 to 8th October 1553. On the charge side, there are entered the sums collected on the "piece silver" in the Kirk each Sunday; the dues received in respect of the freighting of ships in the port of Leith; the entry money of Burgesses and Guild Brethren; the rents for the shops surrounding the Kirk and in the Kirkyard; charges for burial lairs and tombstones; fees for the use of the Seal; penalties for the attempted evasion of shipping dues; charges for the use of the four great golden candlesticks, when required by individuals at funerals or special services; similar charges for the use of the silver candlesticks; and the sums drawn for the exhibition of Saint Giles' arm on Relic Sunday and Saint Giles' Day.

On the Discharge side, there is given the expenditure relating to the up-keep of the fabric and furnishings of the Church; the purchase of candles; sums paid for cleaning; and fees to Officers. Dean of Guild Carmichael also enters the balance on his Accounts for the previous year, details of which are not preserved.

The Accounts continue, placidly enough, with similar entries for the next five years. John Symson was Dean of Guild in 1553-4; James Carmichael again in 1554-5; James Barroun in 1555-6; and James Carmichael again in the two succeeding years, 1556-7 and 1557-8. Each year there is an entry of the payment of ten shillings or six shillings for the "painting of Sanct Geill."

At the close of Mr Carmichael's Accounts in October 1558, there is a hiatus. John Charteris was Dean of Guild in 1558-9, but his Accounts for that year are wanting, although the balance due by him upon them appears as received by his successor. When the Accounts are resumed in May 1560, James Barroun is again Dean of Guild, and a marked change is at once seen to have meanwhile taken place. To fill up the interval of about eighteen months, when the Accounts preserved to us are silent, and to explain the complete change that interval had produced, it is necessary to recall briefly the circumstances of the time.

Though Dean of Guild Carmichael carried his Accounts to the close of his period of office in the beginning of October 1558, and gave no sign of the impending change, the winds were rising ominously and the waves were beating around the walls of the old regime. The storm outside was growing louder; the signs of social earthquake and religious upheaval were becoming daily more visible. The Magistrates were beginning to realise that a crisis was at hand, and were looking into the future with foreboding.

On Saint Giles' Day, 1st September 1558, when the populace seized the image which was being carried in an imposing ecclesiastical procession—"young Sanct Geill," as they called it—and broke it in pieces and scattered the procession, this was an indication that their reverence for the symbols which had been regarded with such veneration by their fathers had ceased, and the time of overthrow was nigh. No doubt we find that, in November 1558, the vacant niche in Saint Giles was filled by a new image of Sanct Geill supplied by the Town Treasurer, at the cost of thirteen pounds, but that only shows that the Magistrates and Council had not as yet advanced so far on the wave of change as the populace. This is farther shown by the steps taken by the Council to protect the Kirk jewels and valuables, which they with good reason felt to be in danger.

Foremost among the treasures of the Kirk was the relic known as the arm-bone of Sanct Geill. In 1454, Sir William Prestoun of Gourton had bequeathed to the community of Edinburgh the arm-bone of Saint Giles, which he had got from Charles VII., King of France. The Magistrates and Council were delighted to get such a precious relic, and promised to build an aisle forth from Our Lady Aisle (where the testator was buried), with a suitable inscription in brass and stone, and assigned a chaplain to sing at the altar there. This relic was annually borne in procession through the streets of the City on 1st September, and was held in great veneration. It was exhibited for a small charge on Relic Sunday and Saint Giles' Day, and the sums received are duly entered in the Accounts.

On 16th December 1558, the Magistrates and Council caused James Mossman, Goldsmith, in their presence, to weigh particularly the whole Kirk jewels and valuables. On 17th January 1559, they took these over from Sir Henry Bonche, sacristan of the Church, evidently feeling that the Church was no longer a safe place for them to be kept in. The jewels were then handed to the Dean of Guild, John Charteris, with strict injunctions to keep them safely and deliver them up to his successor on the termination of his year of office. It had evidently come to this already, that the valuables could not be left in use in the Kirk as before;—the utmost that could be sought was to keep them safe in a place of concealment.

On 8th March 1559, such of the jewels as were still left in the Church were weighed in the presence of the Council assembled in the “ravestre” of the Kirk.

On 14th May, the Queen Regent wrote to the Council referring to the popular tumult which had just taken place in Perth, when the religious houses and images were injured or destroyed, warning them to take precautions against a similar outbreak in Edinburgh. The Council on this placed artillery in position throughout the Town.

In the month of June, the Lords of the Congregation, as the leaders of the Reformed party were called, were advancing to the Town, the Dean of Guild protested that he could not be responsible for the safe-keeping of the Kirk valuables, and the Council “before the coming of the Congregation” distributed the jewels and vestments among the leading citizens for safe-keeping. They then sent a deputation to meet the Lords, and “commune with them for upholding the roofs of the religious places and kirks, and for saving the stalls and other timber works within the kirks.” At the same time, they hired sixty men of war at 2s. 6d. per day to protect the Kirk and stalls. In the following month, the "Congregation"* had taken possession of the Kirk and established the new or reformed system in it. In September, the Council ordered the Dean of Guild to put away the writs of the Town in a place of safety, and he seems to have done this so faithfully, in so far as his own Accounts were concerned, that, as sometimes happens with buried treasure, they cannot now be found. In October, the Congregation had so far the upper hand that they were able to get a stent imposed upon the inhabitants for two thousand merks to raise men of war. Saint Giles' arm was in the keeping of Thomas Makcalzeane, and the Council sent to get it from him that it might be given in pledge of the extent, or else to ask him to lend the money himself on security of the relie.

In November, the Council became doubtful of the wisdom of having the valuables scattered all over the Town, and issued orders that they were to be brought back to them. Evidently, they meant to try and keep them safe in the City Chambers until the clouds rolled by. But the new men who were coming into power found another way of dealing with the articles which relieved the Town Council for ever from all anxiety on their account.

James Barroun again became Dean of Guild in 1559-60. In April 1560, at the "request, desire and will" of the Lords of the Congregation, the Town Council imposed a tax or stent of £1600 to pay a month's wages of four hundred men of war to aid in expelling from Leith the French troops which had come to the aid of the Queen Regent and the adherents of the old faith.

* Note.—The word "congregation," used in the text, was applied to the members of the new or reformed party, as distinguished from the adherents of the old faith and Church system.

In the same month, the Dean of Guild received instructions to repair and whitewash the Kirk, mend the glass windows, and make the seats convenient. In the following month, he was instructed to take down the bell known as the Marie Bell, and the brazen pillars of the Kirk, and make them into artillery.

In May 1560, the sum of £80 having been hastily borrowed from Michael Gilbert, Goldsmith, the silver candlesticks which he had in keeping were impledged to him in security. In June, the Dean of Guild was instructed to make seats, forms, and stools for the people to sit upon during service in the Kirk, and to do all other things to fit it for their use.

When the Kirk Bell and brazen pillars were made into artillery, and the sacred relie of Saint Giles' arm and the silver candlesticks of the Kirk were pledged for debt, it does not surprise us to learn that the next step was to sell off and turn into money all the gold and silver articles which had been devoted to sacred uses for ages. This final step which marked the passing away of the old order was soon taken.

When the Accounts are resumed by James Barroun, Dean of Guild, in 1560, he calmly enters in the beginning of his Account the sums realised for the sale of the "Jowellis of the Kirk" as follows:—A Eucharist, with four little bells of gold, blue bell of gold, two little hearts, and two little crosses hanging at it; the arm of Sanct Geill, with the ring on the finger of it; a silver cross with pedestal; four silver candlesticks; two censers; a ship for incense; a cresum stick; a round Eucharist; a chalice; a plate; a spoon; and two cruets. All these, he states, were "of clean silver, two stones, fifteen pounds and eight ounce," and of gold, five and a half ounce. The silver realised 21s. per ounce, and the gold £10, 5s. per ounce. These produced a total of £854, 7s. 6d. Nothing extra is entered for the relie of the Saint's arm, which, thenceforward, disappears, but the diamond stone which was in the ring "on the fingar of the foresaid arme of S. Geill" was sold to Michael Gilbert for £9, 6s. 8d. These two sums, with the entry money from Burgesses and Gild Brethren, the freighting of ships, and the shop rents, form the charge in the Accounts of the year. The "peece silver," the charges for the exhibition of relies, and the dues of gold and silver candlesticks, are found no more. On the Discharge side, there is a long array of entries giving the details of the payments in renovating the Kirk and adapting it to the ideas of its new masters. At the end of the year, Dean of Guild Barroun had "super-expendit" his charge by the sum of £147, 15s. 5d., and the proceeds of the Kirk jewels were thus exhausted.

James Watsoun was Dean of Guild in 1560-61. His Account begins with the price realised on the sale of three bellows of the Organ, a silver cross, a chalice of the Holy Blood, and another of St Anthony, at 23s. per ounce, and also brazen pillars and lectern, sold for 18s. per stone. There is a large increase in the amount received on the entry of Burgesses and Guild Brethren, and for the freighting of ships going out of Leith. On the Discharge side, he continues the payments for tradesmen working upon and within the Kirk, including a mud wall and a lock to John Knox's study (page 145).

Alexander Guthrie, the Town Clerk, was Dean of Guild for 1561-62. He gives entries of payments for the study of deals made for John Knox (page 153), and for the expenses of a Mission in which he accompanied John Knox to Angus for the choosing of a Superintendent there (page 157). He was again Dean of Guild in the following year, 1562-3, and once more in 1563-4. Alexander Park was Dean of Guild in 1564-5, and his successor was John Prestoun, whose Accounts for the two succeeding years, 1565-6 and 1566-7, close the volume now presented. These later Accounts give numerous entries in detail which the older Deans of Guild used to summarise, and it may be that in the details many useful incidental references will be found.

These Accounts are now made accessible to the public, and this completes the task undertaken by Mr Adam, at the request of the Town Council.
